PREFACE.

THIS Index has been compiled under the direction of a Committee appointed by the Council of the Chemical Society, consisting of the Treasurer (Chairman), the Secretaries, the Editors, Dr. Forster Morley, Mr. J. W. Rodger, and Dr. Palmer Wynne. The actual execution of the work was entrusted to Mrs. Dougal, who has been assisted at various times by Mrs. Guthrie, Miss Neale, B.Sc., Miss Green, Miss Morfee, Miss Sharpe, and Mr. D. A. Gracey.

The Committee are indebted for assistance, and for advice as to the arrangement of special subject matter, to Captain Abney, Mr. Michael Carteighe, Mr. Thiselton-Dyer, Mr. Lazarus Fletcher, Professor Percy Frankland, Mr. A. J. Green, Dr. Halliburton, Professor Hummel, Professor Japp, Professor Meldola, Dr. Morris, Dr. D. H. Scott, Professor Tilden, Mr. Tutton, Dr. J. A. Voelcker, Dr. Walker, and Professor Warington. They desire especially to thank Dr. Forster Morley for the great care with which he has read and corrected the whole of the proof-sheets, and for the many valuable suggestions he has made as the compilation was passing through the press.

The work is divided into two main parts: (1) an Index of Authors arranged alphabetically, with the titles of their respective papers in chronological order; and (2) an Index of Subjects.

The general arrangement of each part is self-evident, and calls therefore for very little explanation. With a view to the more certain identification of authors, care has been taken to give their names in full whenever possible. In some instances, however, even the full name has not sufficed, and it has been necessary, as a means of further identification, to add the name of the town or place with which the author is connected. Thus we have Thomas Andrews of Belfast and Thomas Andrews of Sheffield; Hermann Müller of Hersfeld, Hermann Müller of Munich, and Hermann Müller of Thurgau. In the case of Russian authors, whose papers for the most part reach the Society's publications through German sources, the advice of Professor Menschutkin and Dr. Lewkowitsch has been followed in employing the German system of transliteration, as more likely to lead to uniformity of spelling.

Errors in the names of authors found in the Annual Indexes, and discovered in the course of compiling the Collective Index of Authors, were of course rectified before that section of the work was passed for press; other errors detected subsequently when arranging the Subject-Index are given in a separate list on p. vii. A few papers were found to have been omitted from the Annual Indexes, and hence are not given in their proper place in the Collective Index: a list of these "Additional Entries" will be found also on p. vii. Errors of transcription both in the Annual and in the Collective Indexes when detected have also been corrected.

After careful consideration the Committee decided that the Index of Subjects should be essentially, and in the main, alphabetical, but that whenever practicable the substances should also be alphabetically arranged under certain well-defined main groups, e.g. alkaloids, carbohydrates, glucosides, terpenes, etc. It was further decided that Agricultural Chemistry, which constitutes a large and to some extent an independent section, should be placed apart.

The Collective Index will be found to differ in many particulars from the Annual Indexes upon which it is based. This was inevitable, as in the earlier Annual Indexes especially, no consistent method of arrangement was followed. Changes of nomenclature were necessarily frequent, and although special care has been exercised that in the Collective Index the same substance should not be entered under different names, it is possible that a few instances of synonyms may have escaped detection. Entries omitted in the subject-portion of the Annual Indexes, discovered in the preparation of the Collective Index, have been duly inserted; others discovered subsequently when the separate sections had been printed off are given on p. ix. In very many cases only the title of a paper appears in the Annual Indexes, and it has been necessary to give supplementary entries as more accurately descriptive of its contents. Hence a large number of additional entries have been made in the Collective Index during its compilation; others of which the desirability was seen later, but which could not be added at the proper time, are given on p. x et seq. The list also includes alternative names and double entries omitted from the Collective Index. Clerical and printer's errors which had escaped detection when reading the proofs have, when discovered, been rectified.

In all cases where these have been definitely ascertained position numbers have been given. The sequence of radicles in the name of a substance, and the nomenclature of acidic and aromatic radicles have been arranged in a more systematic manner than hitherto, and except in cases where the "trivial" name was judged to be too well established to be altered, the name which seemed best to express the constitution of the substance has been preferred. Alternative names have, however, been given, with, of course, cross references. Matters relating to inorganic salts will be found under the name of the particular metal: thus, ferrous sulphate will be found under Iron. In the case of organic salts, where the acid is as a rule the distinctive or significant substance, it has been deemed more convenient to place the entries under the name of the acid: thus barium lactate will be found under Lactic acid. Whenever a prefix, such as ortho, meta, para, iso, secondary, tertiary, mono, di and tri, etc., is not part of the alphabetical arrangement, it is printed in italics.

ABBREVIATIONS.

T. = Transactions.
P. = Proceedings.
A. = Abstracts.

o = ortho.
m = meta.
p = para.
n = normal.
prim. = primary.
sec. = secondary.

tert. = tertiary.
ψ = pseudo.
d = dextro.
l = laevo.
i = inactive.
s = symmetrical.
as = unsymmetrical.
b.p. = boiling point.
m.p. = melting point.
